Good practices

- With regard to initiatives addressing students' dropping out, taking a leave of absence, repeating a year of their courses through collaboration between faculty and staff, the university makes serious efforts to provide careful guidance to students through counselling and advice by means of Four-person Interviews among the student, their parent/guardian, their seminar supervisor, and a Student affairs Department staff member. These initiatives are worthy of high evaluation.
- The university's large, well-equipped sports center not only contributes greatly to maintaining students' health and learning environment, but also plays a useful role in cooperation with the local community by broadly accepting users from outside the university. These initiatives are worthy of evaluation.
- The university's PDCA cycle for internal quality assurance is operating organically and effectively through measures such as the utilization of surveys and analysis conducted by the IR Center, the Self-Inspection and Evaluation Committee's promotion of concrete measures for internal quality assurance, and the incorporation of improvement and enhancement measures in the next academic year plan of the mid-term plan. These initiatives are worthy of high evaluation.
