Good practices

- In addition to holding a monthly President's Office Hour the President personally holds interviews in his office with all new entrants and ascertains in detail their mental and physical state, as well as their opinion and requests, and strives to improve learning and class instruction support and the environment. These initiatives are worthy of high evaluation.
- The university has established a system in which the evaluation prescribed in standards for awarding credits is conducted through learning process (in-class/out-of-class) and learning outcome (regular examinations) evaluations, and fairness in achievement evaluations is stringently secured. These initiatives are worthy of evaluation.
- The President holds a University Entity Meeting, is diligent in pursuing smooth communications throughout the university and appropriately exercises leadership in education and learning management. These initiatives are worthy of high evaluation.
- The university tabulates, analyzes and publishes on its website learning and student life data such as the results of student class evaluation questionnaires, questionnaires upon graduation and learning behavior surveys, and eagerly publishes IR information. These initiatives are worthy of evaluation.
