Good practices

- The university has made a conscious effort to utilise its geographical advantages to promote educational and research initiatives, as well as awareness-raising activities. These endeavours are focused on the creation of a society that is free from discrimination and prejudice, with a particular emphasis on the prevention of harassment, support for individuals with disabilities, and the promotion of initiatives for the LGBTQ community and the indigenous Ainu ethnic group. These initiatives are highly commendable.
- The communication between the corporation and the university is active, and the auditors' work is thorough. These factors contribute to the smooth administration of the corporation as a whole. This initiative is commendable.
- A system has been developed in which advice and opinions from external committee members are considered in line with the Self-Inspection and Evaluation Regulations. These opinions are reflected in the university's self-inspection and evaluations and are used to make improvements. This initiative is commendable.
