Good practices

- The university's effort to clearly articulate the abilities students are expected to develop by achieving the diploma policy—organized into six core competencies and 25 specific sub-skills—and to make learning outcomes more visible, is commendable.
- The university has established and implemented its own “Teaching and Learning Management Guidelines,” developed in alignment with the Ministry of Education's national framework, “Guidelines for the Management of Teaching and Learning,” issued by the Subdivision on Universities of the Central Council for Education. Its genuine commitment to promoting learner-centered education is highly commendable.
