Good practices

- With the aim of enhancing the university's education, research, and administrative functions, a Sabbatical System has been implemented. This has enabled faculty members to engage in self-directed professional development. The most notable outcome from the effective utilization of this system is the establishment of a structured, university-wide Interprofessional Education (IPE) program. The application of sabbatical training results in this and other institutional initiatives is commendable and reflects a strategic use of faculty development opportunities.

Recommendations for improvement

- The enrollment rate in the Department of Rehabilitation, Faculty of Medical Science and Welfare has fallen below 70% of its maximum capacity. The department must take targeted measures to improve student intake and improve the continued viability of the program.
